Keynote Topic: Nurturing Brilliance

Passion for learning has been nearly eliminated in our nation's schools. It seems that we have forgotten how passion fuels a child's desire to achieve, in favor of teaching everyone to pass minimal skills tests. This trend has been particularly harmful to gifted children, who are systematically muted and crushed in our race to mediocrity. Learn how to bring passion back into the classroom so that all children can develop their gifts. Learn how simple changes in school structures and practices can result in nurturing the brilliance in all students, and liberate gifted students to truly reach their full potential.

This session is highly interactive. Participants learn that by focusing on the needs of gifted children, they create the structures and curricula that ensure higher achievement for all children. Administrators, teachers, counselors, professional development staff, and parents all gain skills and knowledge to:

- Adjust school schedules to ensure the development of passion for learning
- Develop curricula that follow student interests
- Identify areas of brilliance in students that improve overall achievement
- Identify areas of brilliance in teachers that improve overall student achievement
- Measure interim success through assessment of daily student engagement
